Agenia Clark
Agenia Clark was named president and CEO of the Girls Scouts of Middle Tennessee in 2004. The iconic and local nonprofit serves more than 20,000 Girl Scouts and volunteers in 39 counties in Middle Tennessee. Agenia is also the co-founder of Avenue Bank, former member of the Tennessee Board of Regents and has consistently been recognized as one of Nashville’s “100 Most Powerful People” by the Nashville Business Journal. She is an accomplished C-level executive, board director, business strategist and public relations professional with a diverse set of skills. Her friends recognize her as one of Nashville’s most encouraging leaders who champions others.

Dr. Victoria Niederhauser
Victoria Niederhauser was appointed dean of the College of Nursing for the University of the Tennessee, Knoxville in 2011. In this role, she serves as the college representative for administration, faculty, staff and students. Dr. Niederhauser provides leadership for the college to be a service to the state and nation. She has held various leadership roles as a director, graduate chair and department chair in higher education. She published the book “Core Review for Pediatric Primary Care Nurse Practitioners” in 2007 and has authored over 35 articles and book chapters on child health and educational issues. She also is a nursing faculty member, a board-certified pediatric nurse practitioner, and in 2006, she received the American Academy of Nurse Practitioners State Award of Excellence.
